the form of sympathy with the chief offender, and the incident was allowed to close in what may be regarded as an ignominious manner. The chief offender apologised to the House, and was suspended for the remainder of the sitting. The House was apparently satisfied with that; but Mr. HAYNES, the victim of the assault, was dissatisfied, and sued Mr. FLETCHER, his assailant, for damages. His claim was for £5000. The defendant made no attempt to deny the assault in his pleadings, but paid into court the sum of $5 was sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. When the jury, therefore, returned a verdict for the defendant, they did not mean that Mr. FLETCHER had not assaulted Mr. HAYNES, but simply that, under all the circumstances, a payment of $5 was enough to cover the injury sustained.

to cover the injury he had suffered. Probably Mr. HAYNES is dissatisfied still; but, unfortunately, it is equally probable that the chief offender is more than satisfied, and may consider that he has emerged a victor, and may, in the eyes of some of his constituents, be a sort of hero.

We have used the term chief offender, because there was offence on both sides. This was not denied at the trial. Any of our readers who may be interested in the details will find in the report some account of the accusations and recrimination that led up to the assault, and a still fuller account of the trial.

the assault, and a still fuller narrative in the pages of Hansard. It is generally difficult when scenes take place in the House, and insulting interjections are bandied about with freedom and vigour, to determine exactly where the greatest weight of censure should rest. One gross insult provokes another, and the attempt to deal out discriminating justice to all the offenders would be a painful as well as a thankless task. In the present case there was an exchange of insult between the parties before the assault occurred. It is to be presumed that the jury took the provocation into account and considered that when—

into account, and considered that when an assault in words had been answered by an assault in action the victim of the latter, who had suffered little or no physical injury, was not entitled to heavy compensation. It is with no desire to condone Mr. FLETCHER's gross offence that we are willing to admit the justice of the verdict so far as the parties only are concerned. It would be a public misfortune if any man who thought fit to seize another by the throat and shake him could presume upon being able to do so cheaply, at an outlay of £5. But it would also be a misfortune if any man with a bitter

So far as the two men are personally concerned, the whole matter is of comparatively small public interest. The trial itself is uninteresting. It seems to have been contended for the plaintiff that he was entitled to heavy damages because the assault was committed in the face of the Assembly, and that the verdict should be one that would express the opinion of the jury upon such action, and serve to prevent its repetition within the Legislature.

Chamber. If we do not misunderstand the ruling of the Judge, the jury, though entitled to consider all the circumstances of the case, were not there for the purpose of teaching their representatives a lesson. Their business was to say whether the £5 paid into court was sufficient compensation for the assault committed. In considering all the circumstances, the jury had a right to remember that, whilst the assault was committed before the House, the provocation was also given there, and that even slanderous language uttered within the Assembly is protected by privilege. Undoubtedly, from a public point of view, the resort to physical violence within a Chamber of the Legislature is a gross outrage; but from a personal point of view it can hardly be contended that any member

The public, however, may well be grievously dissatisfied with the manner in which proceedings of this sort are disposed of. However slender Mr. HAYNES's personal claim to heavy compensation may have been, there can be little doubt that from a public point of view Mr. FLETCHER has thoroughly earned what such a high position entitles him to. Analogies to the substantial punishment. Apologies to the House have been so frequent as to become matters of form, that may even be tendered with a smile of complacency. Suspension until the close of a day's sitting is likely to be an amusement rather than a penalty to men of rude manners and blunted sensibility.

ties. The point of interest to the public is, that there seems to be no adequate or effectual method of dealing with members who introduce physical violence into the Legislature. If this sort of thing were allowed to go on, members would attend armed, and bloodshed would be the consequence.

BON GAULTIER's ballad would become descriptive of scenes in the Assembly. From the plaintiff's evidence yesterday it appears that he was at one time during the struggle in some danger of being gouged accidentally. Something should be done when Parliament meets again to provide effectually against what we must now acknowledge to be quite possible outrages. In the course of years several experiments have been made in the treatment of assaults within the precincts of Parliament, but none of them has been satisfactory or successful. In the Macpherson case, many years ago, the attempt was made to prosecute the offender in the Supreme Court for a high offence; but the Court declined to recognise any element of special aggravation attaching to an assault because it was committed within a public place. Now we have an

the precincts of Parliament. Now we attempt to obtain exemplary damages by civil process, but here again the result is failure. The House itself has undertaken to deal with the matter, but its feeble action has been a demonstration of either its insensibility or its helplessness. In view of all the possible consequences of the resort to physical violence in Parliament, there should be some automatic method of punishing offenders in that respect with expulsion; and if the House cannot give itself that power by a standing order, it should seek it by the process of legislation.

It will be settled to-day in all probability whether the Northern Collieries are to be closed at the end of the week, or whether there is to be a reopening of negotiations between masters and men. Yesterday an important meeting was held in Sydney, at which the masters received the Conciliation Committee and submitted their terms; to-day at Newcastle the committee will meet the miners, and it will be seen whether a truce is to be declared, or whether there is to be immediate war. The result of yesterday's meeting is about as satisfactory as could have been anticipated. A friendly disposition was shown by the masters, who agreed to do all, or nearly all, that they were asked to do. The Conciliation Committee, who are acting in the interests of the people of Newcastle, amongst whom must be reckoned the miners themselves, submitted a proposal something in this shape:—"If the men agree to withdraw from the position they have taken up by rescinding the notice to cease work and withdrawing the ballot, will the masters in turn withdraw from the attitude of resistance, because the coercive measures which provoked the resistance would have ceased to exist. As the masters themselves pointed out, they really had nothing to withdraw. The men were attacking, they were defending; if the men ceased hostilities they would be prepared to negotiate."

But this was not an occasion for picking words, or for standing upon ceremony, and if the masters had received the communication in an unfriendly or captious spirit they would have laid themselves open to censure. What the committee meant to convey was probably this: If the miners withdraw from the position they have assumed, can they reckon upon being in no worse position than they were before the ballot took place? Will the masters agree to take up the question at the point at which negotiations were broken off? The reply of the masters to the committee was plain enough, and it is to be hoped that it will satisfy the men. If the men withdraw the strike notices and rescind the coercive resolutions, the masters will be prepared to submit immediately their proposed agreement. Not only was this intimation made, but the agreement itself was placed in the hands of the committee under seal. If the miners agree to the course proposed by the masters, the seal will be broken and the document placed in the hands of the representatives for consideration. The next step will be taken to-day, when the committee will meet the miners at Newcastle, report the result of the interview with the masters, and invite the concurrence of the men in the course which the masters propose. From the information given elsewhere it will be seen that Canon SELWYN and those who are acting with him as peace-makers believe that they will be successful in inducing the men to comply with the conditions laid down. If they meet with the success they expect they will have performed a good work, and will receive the thanks of the whole community; if they fail they will still be thanked for their praiseworthy efforts.

What view the miners may take of the proposal submitted by the masters through the Committee of Conciliation it would be impossible to say; but it may be put to them that it is a proposal which they can accept without any loss of honour or dignity, and without giving up any material advantage. Of course if they have made up their minds to strike unless all their demands are at once acceded to, there is nothing more to be said. But we will not do them the injustice of supposing that they have taken up that position; we assume that whatever impression some of their acts may have conveyed, they are now willing to discuss the matters in dispute with a proper opportunity is afforded for doing so. The opportunity is before them. Will they accept it or deliberately throw away what is probably the last chance of averting a calamitous strike? From the manner in which this contest has been conducted, the masters have had their hands forced. An agreement was submitted to them, and they were asked to accept it, or take the consequences—the consequences being the immediate withdrawal of all labour from the mines. No man with any sense of self-respect could have complied with a demand made in that way. The masters now say, "Withdraw your coercion, and we will confer with you; our proposals shall be instantly laid before you." More than this it seems impossible for them to do, and it rests with the men therefore whether the dispute shall be settled by a bitter contest which will be ruinous to themselves and disastrous to the district in which they live, or whether an effort shall be made to come to an arrangement by negotiation. Before finally closing the door, they should well consider their position. If they have any regard for the welfare of the community in which they live, they will not strike until every other means of settling their differences with the masters has been exhausted. But even if they look at the matter as one of self-interest merely, they will avoid the conflict if possible. Some victories are worse than defeats, and so the Newcastle miners might find if they were to win the day in a strike against the masters. Whatever their strength may be, the resources of the owners are very great, and in such a contest labour could only expect to win after a prolonged struggle.

In what position would the conclusion of a prolonged struggle leave the coal miners of Newcastle, even if they were to come out of it triumphantly, which is not at all a probable thing? Their pockets would be empty, they would probably be in debt, and when they were ready to go to work again many would find that there was no work for them to do. A strike should, therefore, be regarded as the last resort. But if the men can get substantially what they want, or if there is even a chance of getting what they want by negotiation they should not throw that chance away. If they agree to consider the masters' agreement, they are not bound to accept it. They will be quite at liberty to reject it, and if they do that they may then go upon strike if they have a mind to. The only difference would be that the strike would take place a little later than it would otherwise have done. In no possible way could the men lose by accepting the proposal which will be submitted to-day; on the other hand, its acceptance would, probably, save them and many other persons besides from a good deal of hardship and suffering. It seems to be agreed upon both sides that the points in dispute are capable of adjustment, and if a basis of negotiation can only be arrived at, a settlement of differences may be hoped for. The agreement which the masters are ready to submit if the strike notices are withdrawn would afford such a basis. If the two sides, which have been holding each other at arm's length, can only be brought into communication, hopes may be entertained of a satisfactory issue. The Conciliation Committee has done its best to lead the contending parties in this direction. One of them has shown willingness to negotiate if it can do so free from coercive pressure; and it is for the sake of the community that it is to be taken off or kept on. In other words, the Newcastle miners have to declare for a conference or for a strike. As matters now stand, the responsibility rests with them, and they will win the praise or incur the censure of the community according to the use they make of the situation.

The death of Mr. J. S. FARNELL has removed a prominent name from the list of our public men, and a familiar figure from the benches of the Assembly. Nearly thirty years have passed since Mr. FARNELL first entered the House, and through his steady attention to duty, through his appointment to the office of Chairman of Committees, and through his occupancy of seats in several Ministries, he had acquired in the lapse of time a large amount of familiarity with Parliamentary practice, and of acquaintance with the administration of public affairs. For many years past he had held a place in the front rank of our representatives, and was one of those who, amidst the changing fortunes of parties, had a claim to consideration when Governments were being formed. Mr. FARNELL was not a violent partisan, but he was a painstaking politician, who generally had a substantial reason to show for his action. He brought to bear upon the various questions that came before him for discussion conscientiousness and intelligence, and a considerable stock of information. The mysteries of his land law, however, were the subject of his more particular study, and by a diligent use of the opportunities within his reach he acquired facility in the treatment of the many intricate questions arising out of the old law, and prepared himself for the arduous task of rescuing the law after it had been condemned by the country. Even men who differed from him on many points have freely recognised the patience, the ability, the command of resource, and the tact with which he conducted the Land Bill through the Assembly during the protracted session of 1884. Mr. FARNELL's career in the Assembly was distinguished more by usefulness than by brilliancy; and, looking back upon his best days in the House, we may well regret that men of his stamp are not more freely distributed on both sides of the Speaker. One point to his credit may be worthy of special recognition just now. He was neither a scandal-monger nor a grievance-monger. He was not a funnel for the gossip of the street corners to pour through, nor did he seek to build up his own reputation upon the ruins of the characters of other men. He was distinguished by sociability and geniality, and, winning the friendship of many, his enemies were few indeed.

Some particulars of the weather conditions of the colony will be found in another column. The first seven months of the year have been unprecedentedly dry on the coast line. In Sydney, the Observatory record shows a rainfall of only 9.28 inches, against an average of 34.35 inches. That the country around looks so well, and that people have suffered so little, is due mainly to the fact that last year was wet, and that ground was saturated to an extent that forced vegetation, and allowed evaporation without the distressing consequences which otherwise would have been inevitable. As to the citizens' water supply, of course the Nepean scheme being available prevented the scarcity which in recent years threatened to cause suffering, and which indeed did produce a good deal of inconvenience. Fortunately the country has had a more plentiful rainfall than the city, although in most places there has been an insufficiency of moisture. On a journey to Melbourne passengers have noticed the verdant appearance of the vegetation in the Southern districts from the Murrumbidgee to the Murray. On the midland and northern table lands the rainfall has been inadequate to the requirements of farmers, and the year's wheat crop is not expected to be a very good one over a very large area. That is to be deplored, although, as the wheat-growing interest of this colony is not of very large extent, the loss of some portion of a harvest is not so serious a matter as it would be in South Australia or Victoria. The great pastoral industry has suffered less owing to the fact that the wet season of 1887 had supplied vegetation for their stock during the earlier months of this year. Now, however, the outlook is by no means too cheering; and throughout a large part of the colony the farmers and graziers are anxiously looking for rain before the summer sets in. The changeable character of our Australian weather requires all the resource of those who are settling the country. Literally the heavens drop fatness. Without the rainfall the country as time becomes arid almost as the desert. Much has been done to conserve water in dams and otherwise, but what has been accomplished is insignificant in comparison with the requirements of the country. Very little has yet been done by the use of silos or otherwise to preserve excessive vegetation which a wet season creates. Usually much food is destroyed by fire. It cannot be doubted that there is room to do much more than has yet been done to make the years of plenty serve more fully the years of scarcity. The colony, of course, is in its infancy. Labour is dear; the people who occupy the land are not all rich, and money can only be borrowed at high rates. Conservation of water and food will come more extensively in time.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

There was a meeting of the Executive Council yesterday presided over by his Excellency the Governor, at which the sentence of death passed on Robert Hewart for murdering Thomas Park in a prison cell at the city lockup was confirmed. The execution will take place on Tuesday, the 11th proximo. The Government have not yet formally appointed a gentleman to the vacant portfolio of Minister for Lands, but it is stated that Mr. J. M. Brunker, M.L.A., will probably be appointed during the week. Mr. Brunker had an interview with the Premier yesterday, and also spent some time in a visit to the Lands Office. On the occasion of his visit to the Rockwood Reformatory buildings and grounds on Monday, Sir Henry Parkes was accompanied by Mr. Keith, M.L.A., and

Mr. Angus Mackay, lecturer on agriculture at the Sydney School of Arts. The object of the Premier's visit was to form a judgment as to whether this property, which at present is not put to any use, might be suitable for an agricultural college. The visit was made on a rainy day, and the building and grounds are well adapted for that purpose, and the Government will probably take steps immediately to convert the property to that use.

The Reform electors appear to be early in the field. It is stated that a number of the electors are desirous of nominating Dr. Benwick at the forthcoming election. We also understand that there is a probability of Mr. Henry Hudson being a free-trade candidate for the constituency.

The Water and Sewerage Board met at their office, George-street North, yesterday afternoon, the President (Mr. T. Hore) in the chair. A large number of matters were dealt with, and, among other things, it was decided to call for tenders for the supply of no less than 10,000 tons of piping for the use of the Department during 1889. These tenders will be advertised for in the Sydney and London journals.

The board appointed to report on the public demonstration to be made as to the efficacy of Mr. Parkes's preventive of anoxia in sheep and cattle met yesterday afternoon at the Stock Branch of the Mines Department. There were present Messrs. J. D. Lamb, A. Bruce, J. Devlin, E. Stanley, and W. M. Hamlet. Mr. Lamb was elected chairman. The experiments, as before stated, are to be carried out at Old Junee station, the owner, Mr. Devlin, having granted the use of a large paddock for that purpose. At yesterday's meeting Mr. Devlin was deputed to make all the preliminary arrangements, and to procure 10 sheep and 10 cattle as requested by Mr. Parkes's representatives now in Sydney. A statement was submitted to the meeting of the dates in which the different vaccinations will probably be made. The first vaccination, it was understood, will be made during the first week of next month, the second 12 days later, and the final test about the end of the month. Subject to the sanction of the Minister for Mines (who is now absent from Sydney) Mr. E. C. Weller, of the Stock Department, was appointed secretary to the board.

The board appointed to investigate the tramway frauds met for the first time yesterday to hear evidence. Mr. Richardson presided, and the other members of the board were present. Several witnesses were examined at great length, the meeting lasting from 10 in the morning till a quarter to 5 in the afternoon. The board will meet this morning at the same hour to resume the hearing of evidence.

A NOTIFICATION appears in yesterday's Government Gazette to the effect that the corps hitherto known as the "Torpedo and Signalling Corps" will in future be styled "Permanent Signalling Corps." We were requested to Cardinal Moran's present visit to Ireland and his interviews with Archbishop Walsh, Archbishop Croke, and other prominent Irish ecclesiastics associated with the Home Rule movement, letters we understand, have been received from Rome suggesting that the Cardinal is engaged on a diplomatic mission having for its object the establishing of a better understanding between the Irish Roman Catholic hierarchy and the Papacy on Irish political affairs. While in Rome, Cardinal Moran had two special audiences with Pope Leo XIII., and from what has since transpired it is inferred that the Cardinal undertook a mission to Ireland at the request of the Pope, and with a view to settling any points of dispute which may have arisen in connection with the Papal disapproval of some of the methods employed in the Irish agitation for Home Rule. During his stay in Rome Cardinal Moran, according to the accounts which have been received in Sydney, was the object of special attention in ecclesiastical circles, and the circumstances of his visit to Rome, which, as we understand, looked upon as the Pope's official organ, publishing a full account of the demonstration which took place in Sydney on the eve of the Cardinal's departure, with a translation of the elaborate speech delivered by the Right Hon. W. B. Dalley on the occasion, is considered a remarkable evidence of the opinion entertained of the Cardinal at the headquarters of the Roman Catholic Church. It is, we are informed, Cardinal Moran's intention to return to Australia not later than October.

Our London letter, which we publish this morning, deals with the Paraffin and Crime Commission Bill, and the efforts of the Gladstonian and Paraffin parties to limit the scope of the Bill. The efforts of the Gladstonian party are in connection with the late libel suit, the progress of business in the House of Commons, the festivities in connection with the close of the Parliamentary session, the report that Bishop Barry is to be appointed Bishop of Chester, the disposal of the ancestral estate of the Washington family, and recent literature are noticed by our correspondents.

In the No. 1 Jury Court yesterday the evidence on behalf of the plaintiffs in the action Davies and another v. the National Fire and Marine Insurance Company of New Zealand was continued, but had not concluded when the Court adjourned.

A case, arising out of a celebrated case which occurred some months ago in the Legislative Assembly, was heard yesterday by the Jury Court, Darlinghurst, before Mr. Justice Stephen, and a jury of four. The action was brought by Mr. J. Haynes, M.L.A., to recover the sum of £5000 from Mr. Fletcher, M.L.A., as damages for an assault committed in the Legislative Assembly on March 21st last. It will be remembered that during a debate on the question of the E-Legislation, Mr. Fletcher seized Mr. Haynes by the throat, and in consequence of the assault was suspended for the remainder of the sitting. No attempt was made by the defendant to deny the assault, and the sum of £5 was paid into Court as sufficient compensation therefor. The case created a good deal of interest, and a number of members of Parliament were present during the trial. In support of the plaintiff's case, the evidence of the plaintiff himself, Sir Henry Parkes, and Mr. Houghton, was taken. No witnesses were called for the defence, but Mr. Went addressed the jury at some length for the defendant, maintaining that the £5 was sufficient compensation for the assault, and that the plaintiff's case was not supported by the evidence. The jury, after a brief deliberation, found a verdict for the defendant. The case of Hadfield v. Australian Banking Company, an action for the recovery of £1000 damages in consequence of the defendant bank having dishonoured a cheque drawn by the plaintiff, was then commenced, but was not concluded when the Court rose.

We have been requested to state that, with the exception of those gentlemen engaged in the case Davies and another v. the National Fire and Marine Insurance Company of New Zealand the jurors summoned for the No. 1 Jury Court, King-street, to-day, will not be required to attend.

Revenue Courts were yesterday held for the Brisbane and Macquarie Ward. The Mayor presided at each Court. The proceedings were formal.

Messrs. DUNHAM and MILLS, the special auditors to the City Council, have completed their examination of the accounts of the City Surveyor's department for 1887, but have failed to discover evidence of fraud.

A DEPUTATION from the Seamen's Union yesterday waited upon the Mayor, to request the use of the Town Hall for the purpose of a meeting, at which the question of the maritime dispute is to be discussed. The Mayor was also requested to preside at the meeting. The Mayor granted the use of the hall, but could not promise to attend the meeting.

The Mayor of Burwood announced on Tuesday at the council meeting that he had received from the Centennial celebration committee a bronze medal in commemoration of the centenary of the colony. He laid it upon the table. Prior to the council adjourning, Alderman Simpson rose and said that, considering the medal was the only thing the Borough of Burwood had received from the Government during the past five years, something should be done with it. He suggested that a plumb frame be made to show it off. Another alderman considered the medal would spoil the plumb. After some references to the medal had been made, a resolution was passed handing over the medal to the Mayor, who briefly acknowledged the honour conferred on him.

The quarterly meeting of the Residential Council of Parramatta, was held in St. John's Church, Parramatta, on Monday evening last. There was a good attendance, and Archbishop Gleadow presided. Among the subjects discussed were "The Church Act," on the motion of Judge Docker, and the best means of raising funds for Church purposes, by the Rev. C. King. The archdeacon brought under the notice of the chapter the condition of the people at the new reservoir, Potts Hill, where a number of navvies were now being located. It was agreed to observe Thursday next as a day of intercession and prayer for rain, provided a day were not set apart by the Bishop's commissary.

Two 29 Rambulit sheep which were brought to this port a couple of weeks ago, consigned to Messrs. Dalgety and Co., and which were then refused admission to the colony, were yesterday admitted to quarantine at Bradley's Head. The sheep, as was explained in the Herald at the time, were refused admission because they were shipped directly from the port of Marseilles, in contravention of the regulations, which require that all stock for the colonies shall be shipped direct from London. The inspector of stock (Mr. Bruce) has since communicated with the other colonies in regard to the stock, and there being no objection on their part the sheep were therefore admitted. The sheep, which are a fine lot, were for Messrs. J. Robb and Co., of Tullamarine station, Brearley.

Two sittings of the Metropolitan Court of Quarter Sessions were continued yesterday at the Darlinghurst Courthouse, before his Honor Mr. District Court Judge Forbes. The jury, after having been looked up all night, were unable to arrive at any verdict with regard to the case of alleged stealing from the person against Ada Styles, Albert Bernard Styles, and Florence Louisa Konger, who were then discharged.

The accused persons were remanded. A young man named Alfred Edward Wood was found guilty of having forged and uttered a cheque for £3 10s., and was sentenced to five years' penal servitude. Walter Ahearn was acquitted upon a charge of stealing in a dwelling, and a boy named Francis William Jones was found not guilty upon a charge of horse-stealing. George Newman was found guilty upon an indictment charging him with having forged and uttered a cheque for £3 2s. 6d., and was remanded for sentence.

We are requested to direct attention to the advertisements under the heading "Exhibition of Women's Industries," on the second page of the Herald.

The following is the order of musical service at St. Andrew's Cathedral this afternoon, at 4.30:—Magnificat, Parry in D; Nunc Dimittis, Parry in D; anthem, "If ye Love Me" (Attwood).

A LETTER on "The Beautiful in Nature and Art" is to be delivered this evening in the Congregational Church, Point Piper-road, by the Rev. Alexander Gosman, principal of the Congregational College, Victoria.

The foundation-stone of the addition to the Baptist Church was laid on Saturday by Mrs. John Morris, and she was presented with a handsome silver trowel and mallet.

The Permanent Artillery Band, under the direction of Bandmaster Dwyer, will perform a falling programme in the Botanic Gardens:—Overture, "Guy Ransome" (Bishop); waltz, "Jubilee" (Kotman); selection, op. 7, "Pines and Palm-trees" (Muller); waltz, "Pines and Palm-trees" (Muller); march, "Silver Trumpets" (Vivian). God Save the Queen.

A TOWN SPLIT IN TWO BY THE UPRHEAVAL.

MANY PEOPLE BURIED ALIVE.

(BY TELEGRAPH.) (FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

THURSDAY ISLAND, THURSDAY.

The Japanese passenger ship, the Asahi, gave some details of the recent earthquake on the island of Bun Tin Zan. The island is of volcanic formation, and is about 100 square miles in extent, with a fresh-water lake on the top, enclosed by mountain ranges. On July 14 it was noticed that the water had turned to mud. A violent shock followed soon afterwards, almost paralyzing the residents of the town, numbering about 20,000. The town was virtually split in two parts by the upheaval. A large number of persons were swallowed up in the chasm. Many rushed to the foot of the mountain and were killed by the falling lava and boulders from the mountain sides. Those who went westward away from the mountain base saved their lives. Yesterday all the houses in the town were destroyed. Most of the people residing there were buried alive, or were killed by the falling debris. The survivors are in a state of terror. The Governor is doing all that is possible to relieve the distress amongst the survivors. The volcanic eruption lasted from morning till dark at night. Next morning fire sprang from the crater, and it was in the panic ensuing that most of the lives were lost. The mountain virtually fell upon the town, burying all within its range. All the water on the island was turned to mud. Many who escaped destruction by the volcanic disturbances have since been starved to death.

ITALY AND FRANCE.

THE ANNEXATIONS IN THE RED SEA.

REPLY TO THE FRENCH PROTESTS.

FIRMNESS OF ITALY.

(BY CABLE.) (FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

LONDON, AUG. 19.

Signor Crispi, the Italian Premier and Minister for Foreign Affairs, has replied to the circular note issued by M. Goblet, the French Minister for Foreign Affairs, to the great Powers, in which a protest was made against the Italian annexation of Massowah and Zoula, in the Red Sea.

Signor Crispi states that it was not necessary that Italy should notify to the Powers the annexation of the territory in question. He further accuses France, which he declares has no interest in Massowah, of intervening in favour of the Greeks with the object of bringing about the present incident.

The Italian Premier asserts that Italy will defend to the last in the Red Sea littoral the interests of justice and civilisation which she has taken under her care.

(A telegram recently received in Rome from Massowah states that General Baldissera, the Italian commander-in-chief, lately ordered all the inhabitants of Massowah to pay the municipal taxes for the month of July. However, refused compliance, declaring that they were urged to do so by the French Consul, under whose protection they were. Thereupon General Baldissera proclaimed that, being unable to tolerate such an act of rebellion, he had resolved, in virtue of the ordinance of November 9, 1887, to take rigorous measures against all persons who failed to pay the taxes at the proper time.)

The case of the Brights is a notable one in point.
